Well-Known Artists Are Home Again

The art colony of the Monterey Peninsula has added to its number during the past week two distinguished former members.

William Ritschel, world-famous marine painter, returned from New York last week and is now at work in his studio at Carmel Highlands. While in the east several exhibitions of his work were held which attracted and enthused the art lovers and won the unstinted praise of the critics. He will be here a year, and then again to the South Seas.

Miss Evelyn McCormick, after a year or more in Europe, principally in Paris, has returned to her home in Monterey. She studied while abroad—not technique alone, but color, color, color. She begins work again with a new zest, a new enthusiasm, a new outlook.

It is hoped that both artists will have several of their pictures on view in this year's annual Arts and Crafts exhibition.

MacDowell Concert Pleases Many

By Mabel Gray Young

A very pleasant hour or so was enjoyed Tuesday evening by a goodly audience at Arts and Crafts Theatre when Mrs. MacDowell, wife of the composer, gave a program of his works prefaced by a short talk explaining the object of the Peterborough Colony.

Mrs. MacDowell in all the years of close companionship with MacDowell realized the great need of one engaged in creative work for perfect freedom from personal contact. As she naively remarked, even his wife was not allowed to intrude at those times.

Since his death she has devoted her life to founding and carrying on a place where artists, musicians and writers can work out, in perfect freedom, the thoughts and aims which so often are stifled for want of this very freedom. Peterborough, once the home of the MacDowells, beautifully situated in the New Hampshire hills, is the scene of these activities.

Following the talk, Mrs. MacDowell played a program of some of MacDowell's most charming and best known pieces, but it was from bits like the Andante from the Heltic Sonata that one glimpsed the bigness of his genius. Without his sonatas and piano concerto MacDowell would not be acknowledged the greatest of American composers, but these, coupled with his more simple compositions, place him easily at the top. There is a wealth of melody and rich harmony in everything he has written. His songs are especially lovely, although seldom heard. It was very interesting to hear the much-abused "Wild Rose" and "To a Water Lily," played as MacDowell himself would have them. Mrs. MacDowell interpreted the program with great sympathy, a beautiful singing tone and an especially effective left hand. She graciously responded to the applause with two encores.

We can all help her in the beautiful work she is doing by joining the Peterborough League, of which there are two branches on this coast, and in that way feel that we are doing our bit to further art in America.

The Steinway piano, sent down from San Jose, by Sherman, Clay & Co., was a wonderful instrument.

"Seagirt" at the Highlands

"To know what you want instead of humbly saying 'Amen' to what the world thinks you ought to want. is to have kept your soul alive."

The speaker was George E. Stone, photographer and naturalist, and he stood with me upon the balcony of his new studio at Carmel Highlands. Below, the sun glowed on the mission tile of the detached dwelling. To the right, through the pines, the surf mounted high upon the little beach and broke into a whitened flood which returned swishing down the sand. Beyond a sheltering, rocky knoll, the Pacific lay in a broad expanse—the sky a pageant of cloud.

"Of course, my wants are somewhat extravagant, but at least they have been definite, and in some way vague, through a score of years, I have blundered toward the thing I loved." He paused. "You know, this studio and home go back further than this recent activity of building would indicate. In fact, it has been a part of my very consciousness since my earliest days in school. I believe it was in the third grade—or thereabouts. Who the writer was I do not know and I should like much to learn; but at any rate, there was one lesson in the old reader entitled, 'A Monterey Coast Home,' which thrilled my slumbering spirit. The gulls, the shipping, even the scent of mint in the woods, were described there with a simplicity which left a deep impress upon my life. From the commonplace of a school set amid crusted alkali in a little country town, I visualized a dwelling and an activity amid the coolness and the sweetness and the wild vigor of the coast of Monterey.

"I fancied my home would be closer to the waves, the walls rougher and covered with sailcloth, but the exact details are unimportant. At least, here is the home and there, the sea, and this I believe IS Monterey.

"Twelve years ago I found a comrade. One in whom such vague fancies met instant recognition and to whom my incoherent plannings were as fact accomplished. With knapsacks we explored, on foot, a considerable section of the Sonoma coast and built strange creations upon its few tree-covered points. The next year, with steady purpose (this time by auto christened 'Rollie No. 1') the 'Rolling Stones' explored the entire coast of California from below San Diego until, above Brookings, we found ourselves dodging stumps in the wood roads of Southern Oregon.

"We camped on what is now the James Point, but it was late when we arrived, and the wind was chill so that we passed our home, by a few hundred yards, unrecognized.

"Nineteen hundred fifteen and sixteen were years of great activity which took me to Central America, 'movie adventuring' with Rex Beach and others. But January of 1917 (eight years ago) again found us at Carmel to photograph its rugged coast for Prizma. The sign said 'No Trespassing,' but the lane was inviting and there, in all its completeness, and awaiting only recognition, was our 'Seagirt' Point.

"We rounded up the owner, our good friend Frank Devendorf, who found our enthusiasm so infectious that three days later, and with business details and boundary surveys delightfully vague, the place was ours.

"Perry Newberry, out of the goodness of his heart (and because he, once upon a time, had built a log jail), from plans sketched on a shingle with a bit of charcoal from his hearth, built our cabin —with wierd and rickety steps to an overhanging porch.

"But all of my activities seemed by their very nature to center elsewhere. My work was educational. It seemed necessary to remain in touch with the university. Prizma's duties took me often to New York. The war intervened and an eastern trip, scheduled for less than three weeks, lengthened into months until, two years and seven months had intervened before I returned to Carmel, my mind colored by the vivid sights and thrilling experiences of a signal corps war photographer in the Argonne and along the Rhine.

"Perry and I were in the same town on the same day. His outfit moved in while I was trying to leave town with German gasoline salvaged from a 'bdon' in a wrecked railroad station, and we failed to recognize each other.

"If all had gone well, I might still have cherished my Carmel home as a dream unrealized. But the business reaction of 1920 most seriously affected the market for educational products. Simply as a relief for pent-up energies and to work out my resentment of peoples and events, I started this house. Two ex-soldiers, strong and loyal, were my helpers. We rigged a wooden railroad down the cliff. With six hundred and seventy-five feet of heavy rope we harnessed our auto, Rollie No. 2 (although a veteran of a transcontinental trip and camp hardships in a dozen states) and twice each five minutes, by the watch, our crazy railroad brought up its load of beach sand. Accidents of course. Rails spread. Eyebolts pulled out. Twice, the car rolled headlong down the cliff. But, in the end, our house was built of cement and sand and a ton of steel tight against storm and shock.

"At a convenient time, a call came from Priza which took us to Hollywood. But the longing for the little home was strong. My tastes were not in sympathy with work so artificial, so transitory and so purposeless—so home we came.

"Roofed with tile and hung with sea-blue curtains woven by Mrs. Stone's deft fingers, the dream became a home.

"But my activities overflowed their proper bounds. The kitchen—my darkroom—the studio room cluttered with cameras and lights, the additional building became a necessity. In the most casual way, without definite plan, we started in until now, as you see, we have piled skyward full three stories. You would not think it from the outside; the concrete walls give no hint; but hidden away, within the center of the house, and almost untouched, is the little log house which Perry built to serve as a home for our favored guest.

"Lantern slides and stereographs of all natural science subjects—these are our specialties; and from this little laboratory, although isolated, we send out thousands of views to libraries, schools and universities and to individuals everywhere.

"It is a little early yet to show you all of the equipment. Some is packed for safety. Much is not yet assembled, but come back in a few weeks, when the plasterers are finished, and I will show you, through my microscope, sights which will make you wonder and admire."

Dogs on Auto Running Board Taboo in Bill

Among the bills introduced in the Assembly at Sacramento is one by Assemblyman Reindollar of San Rafael. The bill makes it unlawful for automobilists to carry dogs on the running boards or clinging to the hood. The practice results in the needless injury to dumb animals, the author of the bill states.

Captain and Mrs. Redner entertained a party for dinner recently at the Mission Tea House and later repaired to their quarters at the Presidio, where the balance of the evening was given to bridge. Covers were laid for Colonel and Mrs. J. H. Brees, Major and Mrs. Doah, Major and Mrs. Daley, Captain and Mrs. Hawley, Captain and Mrs. Waldren, Lieutenant and Mrs. Phillips, Lieutenant Fennell, Lieutenant Meehan, Mrs. Webb and Miss Webb.

Trustees Begin Work on Building Code

The city trustees, all of them, assembled early last Monday evening to transact such business as might properly be presented. Calling of the meeting to order was delayed by the non-arrival of Dr. A. E. Burton, President of the City Planning Commission, who was scheduled to present a report on a proposed building ordinance.

However, while waiting for the doctor, the board passed a resolution appointing O. K. Miller deputy marshal and deputy ex-officio tax collector. His particular duties will have to do with the administration of animal legislation, deputy marshal and deputy ex-officio tax collector.

The board took action to protect itself against the possible loss by theft of the twenty one-thousand dollar bonds of the city and county of San Francisco, owned by this city and credited to the Harrison Memorial Library fund, by having the bonds registered with the treasurer of San Francisco.

At length Dr. Burton arrived—all smiles—and carrying a thick volume. He stated that he had seventy pages of printed matter to read, having to do with the enactment of a building code for this city. Everybody sighed, and the reading began and continued with occasional interruption until twenty pages were read. Then everybody was tired, and the board agreed to meet again on Thursday night of this week.

The new code is based upon the state laws in such matters made and provided, upon local conditions and upon the ordinances in force in other communities.

Not one local contractor was in attendance.

Carmel is Safe— Dramatically Speaking

Carmel's dramatic future is safe: no one who saw the vaudeville show put on by Jinnee Burton and her group at Arts and Crafts last Saturday night can doubt it. A group of pleased parents and guardians, after the performance, heard a visiting playwright, Jesse Lynch Williams, of New York, whose play, "Why Marry?" won the Pulitzer prize in 1917, say something like this:

"But those girls of yours are not merely clever and charming—in most of their acts there was a real idea. It did not always get over very well, but that's natural, with their inexperience. The point is that the idea was there. And it was nearly always an original idea. These young players weren't copying stuff they had seen in the city, but creating things of their own. And it was spontaneous. In no spot were you conscious of that dreadful thing, the hand of the director. I liked their impersonality, too. Most amateurs are so anxious to have their names brought forward. And that girl who did the prima donna has real comedy and a true sense of the theatre—a totally different thing from the mere gift of parody."

Yes, Carmel is safe. And we old ones who have been agonizing about it for weary years are looking on at the young ones much as the old Monterey pines might regard the vigorous young growth about them. There will be always pine trees in the forest—and always plays in Carmel.

New Animal Book

The New York Saturday Review of Literature, reviewing "Dogs and Men," by Mary Ansell, says:

"These fond armchair memories of dogs, with disparagements of men, acquire an interest when their author permits it to appear that she was Lady Barrie, giving pleasant surface glimpses of her life in that capacity and telling of the dogs that were Barrie's models for Nana in "Peter Pan." Her use of this material is frugal and is kept within "good taste," yet there is no doubt of its being a bid for readers. Apart from it the book is hardly noteworthy. The general effect of the writing, confirmed by the tenor of some passages, is to suggest a rather child-like personality, embittered by hard experience, doing its best in the character of a captivating essayist.

The Local Humane Work

The generosity and good citizenship of Mr. Alfred Miller in taking over the work of collecting dog and cat licenses, taking up strays and caring for them at his own expense and inconvenience will certainly be appreciated, especially as the summer "open season for pets" comes on. We can show our gratitude by friendly and intelligent co-operation.

These public services are always most appreciated when they come unasked, as in the offer of Mr. Miller to the trustees, but if there is any like minded citizen who wishes to serve and does not see the need—how about suggesting a clean-up campaign, a stray paper round-up, a watch-your-cans week, or a bury-bones committee. The recent sweeping rains have revealed some unsightly outdoor home keeping, and there are still those in Carmel who regasd empty lots as public dumps.

Large Fines in Nebraska for Illegal Hunting

Large fines are imposed in Nebraska for violations of the game laws relating to migratory birds. A report received by the Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agriculture states that three violators apprehended killing wild ducks and hunting without a license in Nebraska during March were arraigned in State court for Merrick County at Central City, Nebr., and a fine of $325.60 was assessed against one offender and $525.60 each against the other two. At the time of the report two of the accused were still in jail, where it will be necessary for them to remain for 5 months and 27 days unless the fines are paid. Two men hunting ducks, having in their possession 24 birds, were arraigned before the county court of Orleans, Nebr., where they entered pleas of guilty and were fined $304.70 and $305 each, a total of $609.70. The fines were paid.

International Meeting

There were many encouraging reports at the meeting of the International Humane Societies in London last fall.

Encouragement came from Hungary. Mrs. Ilona de Gyory Ginever of the Hungarian Society for the Protection of Animals told of horses with tails not docked for whom a whip was a thing almost unknown; of fodder houses on the slopes of the Carpathian range filled with winter food for deer; of tens of thousands of nesting boxes fixed to trees for the wild birds, and of the work of the animal protection societies in distributing literature throughout the schools where children were taught to celebrate the day of trees and birds.

Encouraging, too, was the description by George C. Coppley, who represented the Ontario Humane Society and affiliated societies, of the Jack Miner bird sanctuaries of Canada, where thousands of migrating birds might rest and feed on their way to other lands.

Awakening conditions in Chile had ended the old habit of forcing cattle to swim ashore from incoming boats in favor of the use of lighters, and this, as Alfredo Phillipp of the Santiago and Inquique S. P. A. explained, in the face of bitter opposition from the dealers who declared the new method would involve needless expense. Fine work is being done, too, Senor Phillipp said, in South and Central America by the people of Buenos Aires, Montevideo, Rio Janeiro and Havana, but more lectures and leaflets and pictures were pressing needs.

Will He Get Enough to Go Around?

The new Chevrolet is a success — no question about it. Four sales within forty-eight hours of showing the touring model sets a pace for almost any town of Carmel's size. It makes Paul J. Denny, local agent, grin, although at times he frowns over the likelihood of delayed deliveries.

"It goes to show," said Mr. Denny yesterday, as he surveyed with pride the group around one of the handsome closed models just arrived. "that the people of this community know a good thing when they see it. The new Chevrolet will sell itself. For beauty and power and intrinsic built-in value it can't be beat by any car selling under $1,200. The biggest problem facing me this year is the proposition of getting enough cars to go around."

Baseball Resumed Tomorrow Afternoon

By winning three games in one day, the Rainfall last week took the undisputed lead in the Abalone League's Hooper cup series. It was the first time in two years that the weather man turned loose a rainy Sunday afternoon while the series was in progress. Tomorrow the six clubs will play according to last Sunday's session, as follows:

1 o'clock—Sardines vs. Sandabs.
2 o'clock—Sharks vs. Seals.
3 o'clock—Whales vs. Goldfish.

The Sardines, Seals and Sharks were the winners in the first set of games, and tomorrow's schedule sees two of these teams tying into each other with Tal Josselyn leading the Seals and brother Winsor the Sharks.

Colonel Dutton's Sardines have a hard game ahead with Neb Lewis' Sand Dabs. The wind-up for the afternoon should prove a close contest, for with added strength and a shifted line-up Jimmy Hopper's Goldfish expect to stage a battle royal with Eddie Burns' husky Whales.

Batting averages for last year's Hooper cup series, just tabulated, show Harrison Godwin leading. The figures for the first ten hitters are: Harrison Godwin, .766; Hal Selby, .742; By Ford, .740; Phil Wilson, Jr., .719; Tom Douglas, .714; Fletcher Dutton, .694; H. Van Riper, .676; Chas. Van Riper, .640; Ray Woodward, .619; Winsor Josselyn, .614.

To Whom It May Concern

IN JUSTICE to yourself, to your pocketbook, and taking into consideration the safety and comfort of those of your family who ride with you, there are at least eight questions you should have answered to your satisfaction before "decorating the mahogany" or putting your name on the dotted line, viz.: 1.—How does this car offered me rate as to power? 2.—Is it speedy enough for my purpose? 3.—Will its qualities endure? 4.—How does it look? 5.—Will it be an expensive car to run and maintain? 6.—Is it an easy-riding car, comfortable in both seats? 7.—Is it safe respecting ease of braking and steering? 8.—Can I afford the first cost?

I will answer these questions frankly, and as fully as limited space permits.

POWER—The new Chevrolet will out-pull any car of its weight, and SOME cars of thrice its weight, on any gear, and on any hill.

SPEED—The new Chevrolet, while by no means a racing car, is by virtue of a heavier crankshaft and motor refinements, faster than ever before.

ENDURANCE—The new Chevrolet is built to last through the years. The radiator shell of rustless airplane metal is but one feature out of a dozen I could mention.

APPEARANCE—The new Chevrolet models are finished in DUCO, the wonder enamel of the decade, indestructable, non-"checking" and beautiful.

UP-KEEP—The new Chevrolet will never need re-finishing. It is light on tires—the new springs attend to that—it is economical as to oil and gas.

COMFORTABLE RIDING—The new Chevrolet has semi-elliptic springs of chrome vanadium steel, front and rear. Its heavy and durable upholstery over coil springs deeper than ever before, assure the maximum of riding comfort.

EASY AND SAFE DRIVING—The new Chevrolet, with its generous braking surface and scientifically designed steering mechanism, is easy to steer, easy to stop.

FIRST COST—The new Chevrolet is right as to price. If you can afford ANY car, you can afford to own and drive a new Chevrolet. And if it'll be a convenience to you, you may pay a little bit at a time.

Drop in on me at your convenience, two doors from Carmel's postoffice, and let me tell you about the new Chevrolet's many other improvements and modern accessories built into the car. Cowl lights for parking? Of course. Also automatic windshield wiper, complete Alemite lubricating system, and lots of other good things.

Better ride and sign up today—or take your chances on a deferred delivery. For there's bound to be a long waiting list.

THE FEWER THE LAWS, THE BETTER THE GOVERNMENT

There is an old gag in a popular song, "For everything wrong beneath the sun I'll make a law to stop it."

This is the season of the year when would-be political reformers advocate a multiplicity of state and national laws to remedy imperfections in trade and industry.

There is a large number of people who believe that the remedy for defects and abuses and dishonesty in the business world is more and still more legislation.

Thus it comes about that Congress and state Legislatures and city governments design measures to control and regulate railways, public utilities and big industries.

The wonder is that with all these onslaughts in the past, it has been possible for large industrial and public service organizations to exist, to say nothing about their ability to make profits and enlist new capital for extensions.

As usual, many novelties and experiments are proposed this month of the year that the Romans dignified with the God Januaris, a figure facing both ways.

About five new cabinet positions with prospective employment for 100,000 officials and hundreds of new state boards and commissions, also employing taxeaters galore, are proposed with the magic formula, "Be it enacted, etc."

The people can only pray that most of these propositions will be defeated and that steady principles of self reliance and common-sense may prevail in their stead. We can never improve on the maxim of Thomas Jefferson that an intelligent commonwealth is governed the best when it is governed the least.

FIRE DESTRUCTION AFFECTS EVERYONE

When a serious fire occurs, particularly if it involves a business structure, its ramifications are almost endless. Suppose, for example, that an enterprise constituting the major support of a whole town is wiped out by the flames and because of various reasons the plant is not rebuilt. Employes' wages are at once cut off and it becomes impossible for them to find other work in that town. They must fall back on their savings accounts and money begins to flow out of the banks and from the treasuries of the building and loan societies. Cheaper living quarters must then be sought and the storekeepers begin to notice that their sales are falling off. The amusement business drops to almost nothing and church contributions decline. Soon there begins a general exodus to other cities where jobs are to be had. Families are uprooted, children taken out of school and in a few months the place is only a shadow of its former prosperous self. Every factory fire has a similar effect in a lesser degree.

Of course, insurance against fire and business interruption can prevent such disastrous consequences and is doing it every day, but insurance does not restore; it simply replaces destroyed buildings and commodities; property that has gone up in smoke is forever lost to society.

JUST KIDDING

Being the Semi-Serious Musings of Carmel's Own Sam Pepys

THE KIDS' VAUDEVILLE pleased us immensely. Those of the elder generation, blase and worldly wise, callous perhaps to anything less than a Spectacle, a Pageant, a rattling of dramatic bones to the accompaniment of speech too deep for the ken of the average among us, would do well to keep an eye on this virile and virgin talent. For they're comers. Let us have more of them. And let us have more benefits for the library—for the dear Lord knows the library needs it. In it, on its rambling shelves, hidden away in dark recesses, we found more loose-leaf and dog-eared books than we have ever seen outside of a junk shop. And when we asked if they had anything by D. H. Lawrence or Sherwood Anderson (not that we approve of them) we were eyed frostily. And, to be candid, after visiting the rival library and taking out "Many Marriages" and "Sons and Lovers" and reading them over, we can't say we blame the young lady of the cool glance. For there are many things, we opine, better left to the text-books of the dissecting room, the pens of Kraft-Ebbing and Mr. Havelock Ellis.

GUS ENGLUND wants it distinctly understood that he will play no favorites in this matter of collecting the dog taxes. Mutts and prize-winners all look alike to Gus. Beagle and Schipperke, Dachshund and Airedale—it matters not. Owners will please call with the coin. In other words:

"ENGLUND EXPECTS EVERY MAN TO DO HIS DUTY."

MR. FREDERICK WARDE is coming to town. A bard; a mime of the Mimes; an exponent of Shakespeare; one of the Old School left to us by the swallowing years. To the younger set of Carmel we commend him. To those of you who have no treasured memories of the days when Gordon Gin was eighty-five cents (and with trading stamps), we most seriously advise to give ear to Mr. Frederick Warde should he give a reading while here. For when he is gone from us he will sit with Booth and Barret, with Mantell and Forbes-Robertson—and lo! there will be none to take his place. In the valley of the Tujungans, not far from where John Stevens McGroarty has builded him a home, Mr. Frederick Warde has had erected a castle of sorts. He has for neighbors a high-class pawnbroker on one hand, a retired dealer in barber supplies on the other. Both the latter love flowers, the scent of earth newly turned. Strange! And true. We were for a period, dwellers in the beloved valley of the Tujungans, twenty-five minutes from Pershing Square in what we have termed "The City of Unburied Dead," which is Los Angeles. Below the Warde castle and the McGroarty cabin our cottage nestled in the bosom of the valley. Behind us sprawled the Sierra, a monstrous lizard with granite spine. Up the winding reaches of Tujunga Creek, through a gray canyon with glacier-polished walls, the explorer comes upon a pocket of green and bloom. There are more grapes there than one can name in a day. Alicante, Bouchet, Mission, Cornichon, Zinfandel—what's the use? And there is a long table under an arbor where huge and fragrant bunches of Tokays all but graze the ash on one's cigarette. Over these few acres of fig trees and vines, its age-stained wine-press and cool cellar, its pens of fat shoats and coops of laying fowl, presides a man of mature years. He is kindly of mien, portly of girth. Twice in ten years has he made the pilgrimage to Los Angeles, two hours distant, once to attend a funeral, once with us to see Douglas Fairbanks in "The Mark of Zorro." He reads none at all. Nature is his book. The murmuring of the creek is his music. He knows nothing of grammar—cares less. He has nothing to sell, but gives freely of his table and cheer to those who like him not solely because of the vintage. We suspect that this Montaigne of the Canyon is a philosopher, perhaps a poet, for he says: "I got everything. I got wheat for my pigs, my horse and two cows. I grind my flour. I make my butter. I got plenty cheese. I got wood. Oak, pine, manzanita, for the cold. Beef cattle up the canyon, lamb for barbecue. Chicken, eggs, figs, oranges when not too much frost, trout fish a-plenty. Five kinds wine—the best in California. Company? Plenty people come to see me up here—Hollywood picture people, fine men, fine girls. I got everything, I tell you; what the hell I care about Los Angeles?"

Which, we contend, if Sandburg is right, is poetry.

Short Bits Relating to The Seven Arts

MOTHER GOOSE

An earnest woman in the East is launching a "drive" to censor Mother Goose. She believes that much, perhaps most, of the alleged immorality of the younger generation may be ascribed to such rhymes as the one about Tom, Tom, the piper's son, of light-fingered proclivities; or that casual reference to the polygamous individual from St. Ives; or that symbolic bit of advice to the effect that if you have once jumped into a bramble-bush and gotten scratched, the thing to do is to jump in again.

It's true that when Little Jack Horner found the plum, he took all the credit to himself; that Miss Muffet took the cowardly course instead of emulating St. George and slaying the spider; and that Simple Simon staked himself to a good-sized meal by trick and device instead of paying for it. These things are beyond doubt immoral. But also they are extremely human in their appeal, and the lady who is trying to put their popularity out of business has mapped out for herself a lifetime job which should prevent her turning her attention to such evils as tea, latchkeys and that terrible deviled ham.—S. F. Examiner.

Illustrator to Writer

Anne Shannon Monroe, a writer on Good Housekeeping, who is spending the winter in Carmel, and whose novel, "Behind the Ranges," a story of an Oregon Cattle Ranch, will be a Doubleday Page and Co. publication for April, is in receipt of a very interesting letter from the artist who made the jacket illustration, Remington Schuyler. Mr. Schuyler writes as follows:

"Dear Miss Monroe:

"Recently I had the pleasure of making the cover paper jacket illustration for your book, 'Behind the Ranges.'

"In the course of a year I have to read and digest and illustrate so many western gun play thrillers' that it was a distinct joy to read your book.

"The growth and final development of Helie was intensely interesting and so logical and well done. Instead of the omnipresent bang of guns that to my mind almost ruins Western stories, I liked the hint of tragedy that hovered over the story, but only came to its climax at the end.

"I think you have done some exceptionally fine work on this book. You have given fine characterizations of Ril and his brother. In Dakota where I ranched it, there were such men. But above all I feel you have saturated your story with atmosphere—not surface atmosphere, but that intangible quality that differentiates the West from the East. * * * Oases like yours make illustrations have a real thrill at times.

With best wishes,
Sincerely your friend,
REMINGTON SCHUYLER."

Potboilers Find New Home

The Potboiler players of Los Angeles have found a theatre to take the place of their Chinatown lair which was recently closed by the fire department. In future they will hold forth in Ruth St. Denis' theatre on South Grand avenue, and they have taken the lower floor for their club rooms.

On February 15 they will start a week's run of "Failures," with Arthur Lubin and Sylvia Pennington in the lead, and will produce every month henceforth instead of every two months. They also are starting work on "Behind the Curtain of the Soul," a Russian play never produced in this country, which they claim is the most wonderful one-act play ever written. It calls for an elaborate setting and unusual lighting effects.

H. C. L. Peterborough Non Est

It is interesting to know that the high cost of living which we had supposed had penetrated all America, has not appreciably affected life at Peterborough, where Mrs. Edward MacDowell, who has been in Carmel this week, has established a center for creative artists.

From the beginning of the movement, about twelve years ago, Mrs. MacDowell insisted that the cost of living in the colony should be as low as was consistent with good wholesome food and comfortable service. The price paid—about equal to the usual price for board in the country—covered room, three meals, the use, exclusively of one of the very charming studios, and the privilege of the tennis courts, swimming tanks, etc. With the passing of the years, many improvements have been made, and many conveniences and sources of recreation added, but the cost of living there has not materially increased. Scholarships have been established so that every year there are those who have all the benefits, gratis.

Toy a Carmel Visitor

Harvey M. Toy, President of the State Highway Commission, was a Carmel visitor this week, registering at Pine Inn.

Toy's visit to this section has to do with his interest in and inspection of the Carmel-San Simeon highway.

When visiting the Pine Cone office, an intimation from the editor that Toy was a candidate for Governor, brought forth an emphatic denial.

Street Work Controversy on in Earnest

The proposed street improvements in north Carmel has developed into quite a sizeable controversy. The board of trustees is making every effort to reconcile the factions and plans, and will shortly recommend some definite and more or less satisfactory plan.

Mrs. Ella Rigney, leader of the opposition to the original scheme, continues to receive letters endorsing her stand. For instance:

"I am hastening to write you my opinion of the contemplated desecration of our part of Carmel. I'd like to make it a thousand times more emphatic than the form you suggest. I cannot conceive anyone favoring such a short-sighted policy; when they have made their improvements (?) they are destroying Carmel for the people who invested their money because of its natural charm, and making it into a commonplace village that can be duplicated a thousand times over in California.

"It is morally wrong to take away from people what they paid their money to secure.
